enhance effectiveness of Current Force. Army transformation is part of constant change team

The Network- Leverage and enable interdependent, network-centric warfare

Modularity- Create modular, capabilities-based unit designs

Joint and Expeditionary Mindset- Retain our campaign qualities while developing a Joint Expeditionary Mindset

AC/RC Balance- Align AC/RC within the current security context. Redesign the force to achieve a 15-day deployable Active Component force and contributing Reserve Component force that predictably deploys no more than one year in six

Force Stabilization/Unit Manning - Ensure unit stability and continuity, and provide predictability to Soldiers and their families

Enable the Force

Installations as Flagships- Enhance Installation ability to project power and support families

Resource Processes- Redesign resource processes to be flexible, responsive and timely

Strategic Communications- Tell the Army Story so that the Army's relevance and direction are clearly understood and supported

Authorities, Responsibilities, and Accountability- Clarify authorities, resources and

Delivering a Relevant and Ready Army to the Nation

- The Army will continue to transform from the current to the future force within the context of constant change and global challenges. We will transform even while we continue to conduct operations in contact with our enemies.
- We expect to accelerate the transformation of the Army's doctrine, organization, training, materiel, leader development, people, and facilities. And we must constantly work to discover what we can bring forward from the future to the current force to increase our capability - now.
- Change is not new -- our Army has been changing since day one. We are an Army that is constantly learning and modernizing.
